Something about Juliette

If Sean Renard was honest with himself, and although he did like to deceive himself and others quite often, he would admit, to himself only, that he'd always been intrigued by Juliette Silverton. Ever since he'd discovered that there was a Grimm who worked for him, and he'd delved into Nick Burkhardt's life and found her there, he'd always wondered about her.

He'd found out that she was a vet and a really nice woman from all accounts; the sort of person who would probably make the Grimm happy if his life wasn't messed by up by the whole Wesen-Grimm thing and not to mention being a detective in one of the weirdest, for lack of a better word, cities in the whole country.

She was attractive and polite and nice, if a little cold and offhand and that should have been the end of it but then he'd had to purify himself in order to save her life and Renard would have liked to say that that was when all thisâ€¦ strangeness began but it wasn't the truth, it had begun a long time ago. But that was a matter for another time, suddenly he was dreaming about her and obsessing about being with her and he would have liked to say that it all ended when the spell was broken but he knew that it wasn't true.

Still, he was glad for the self-control he possessed but mostly for the craziness that was his life; because of those two things he was able to not think about Juliette Silverton more than he had to, he could focus on his life. But no, it wasn't going to be that easy, Juliette became a Hexenbiest and guess who she turned to for help,

Renard was sort of smug that he had that over Nick; that he knew that Juliette had turned into a Hexenbiest before Nick did but that didn't last long either. Juliette turned into a real beast, and had he not been so taken up with the all Ripper thing and of course Kenneth's presence in Portland, Renard would have taken the time to get to know Juliette Silverton even better. She had been an intriguing human being but HexenJuliette was something else altogether.

Fate has a funny way of working things out and Juliette was killed and that was the end of that. Well, it should have been the end of that but instead Juliette became Eve and she was back in his life.

He watched helplessly as she opened the locks on his car and opened the door to join him.

She was all business. "Who asked you to endorse Andrew Dixon?" she wanted to know, and after getting the answer she was ready to leave.

"Why don't you stay?" he asked her. "We should talk." For the life of him, he wasn't even sure what he wanted to say to her.

"Some other time, perhaps," she replied, and got out of the car.

Renard had things to do, he needed to know who had killed Andy and why but he found himself thinking about Juliette/Eve. There had always been something about her that he excited him but now that she was Hexenbiest she was truly irresistibleâ€¦he couldn't wait to really spend time with her and get to know her.

He could tell himself that it was the power that she possessed that attracted him to her but he knew that it was more than that.

There had always been something about Juliette Silverton.

He watched her disappear into the distance and started his car. He hoped that he wouldn't have to wait too long for that talk.
